

Abstract. In this talk, we consider quantum trajectories without knowledge of the initial state. In this case, an estimation of the trajectory is built by setting an arbitrary initial state and make it evolve according to the measurement records. We study the asymptotic behaviour of this estimation and exhibit conditions for converging to the true trajectory. In a second part, we show how these results can be applied to estimate parameters of the dynamics by embedding the set of parameters in the state space.